in these cases to decide according to the evidence; at the same time, it you have any doubt you are bound to give the prisoner the bencfit of it. Suppose you have to pronounce on the guilt or innocence of a gentleman accused of felony. You will naturally doubt whether any gentleman would commit such offences -accordingly, however strong may be the testimony against him, you will, perhaps, acquit him. The evidence of your own senses at least, ascredible as that of the witnesses; f, therefore, your eyesight convince you that the prisoner is a well-dressed person, you have a right to presume his respectability; and it is for you to say whether a respectable person would be likely to be guilty of the the Consulting Surgeon, which will be sent by crimes imputed to him. In like manner, when you see a shabby-looking fellow in the dock, charged for example, with sheep-stealing, the decision rests with you, first, whether or not that individual is a ragamuffin, and, secondly, how far it is probable that a man of that description would steal sheep. Of course, as has been before said, you will always be guided by the evidence: but, then, whether the evidence is trustworthy or not, is a matter for your private consideration. You may believe it it you choose, or you may disbelieve it; and whether, gentlemen of the jury, you will beimmediately after it is over to all who order from me. Address. P. J.
